

Hyalite Creek Trail

Date

Sun, 01/10/2021 - 18:32

Activity

Skiing

While ski touring in the Hyalite Creek Drainage today, my ski partner and I both, at separate times of the day, remote triggered sudden collapses. Each time, we felt the snow collapse underneath our feet, and then heard and felt a deep "whumph". The noise came from the North of us both times, where the slope was slightly steeper (still below about 28 degrees-- not colored with "slope angle shading" layer on caltopo. The danger was rated as "moderate" in the Northern Gallatins today, so we were both extremely surprised by these events.

I am also wondering if you have any women on your team, or if you are just "The Avalanche Guys"?

Thanks so much for all that you do.

Region

Northern Gallatin

Observer Name

Ellie Nolan